Notes on Noticing

When you arrive in a new school you see it with new eyes. You notice things others may not and it's worth taking note of that. I was sharing this idea with the Governing Council Executive and they asked that I share some of those observations with the rest of the community.

Braeview is well resourced.

There are beautiful open spaces to play, run and learn and so many of these have been enhanced spectacularly with careful planting, multilevel walls for climbing, colour, interest, art, mosaics, trees, shrubs – and the kitchen garden is prolific and plentiful – teeming with growth and life. The playgrounds are many and varied with hard and soft surfaces, sand and soil, timber and natural materials alongside manmade surfaces. People have taken time to consider the learners in these spaces.

The classrooms are well cared for and showcase student learning. There is contemporary technology access a-plenty whenever and wherever students need it. Rooms are equipped with ICT that supports teacher pedagogy and student learning with visual, audio and multimedia tools – hover cams, sound field systems.

The human resourcing is above and beyond and this is where a school is able to make a real difference – there are so many parent volunteers and committed staff; both teaching and para-professionals working together in the best interests of students. To watch the sensitivity with which these professionals manage the differing needs of each student is what builds the capacity of the whole community. The students too have a positive disposition of welcoming difference and of understanding and accepting diversity which is commendable. The equity exists in every child getting what they need, not getting the same – this is evident in so many ways. From support time in and out of class to the delightful reminders about appropriate manners needed in interactions and greetings in the front office. The whole community cares for every student and is aware of what works and what doesn't for each of them in their beautiful and diverse personalities.

I have the joyous opportunity now to support these staff and students in the next stage of development as we explore and inquire further using integrated STEM ideas, processes and principles.

Please don't hesitate to get in touch if you have questions or feedback regarding these observations.

Kind Regards

Judy Beal

Around the Classroom: A focus on Reading Strategies

Teachers plan and implement explicit lessons that focus on the development of reading strategies that include: Making Connection, Activating Prior Knowledge, Questioning, Visualising and Inferring, Summarising and Synthesising. Teachers use a variety of multimodal texts to deconstruct – break down to make meaning. Teachers also use the texts as models in their writing

Information Evenings:
Research, Theory & Application

At Therasuit Australia, we help children with motor dysfunctions through intensive therapy programs. Using a variety of therapies from around the world, we achieve faster results than children have achieved previously.

During our information evening, we will discuss the latest research into motor dysfunction and the research of Chad Timmermans - our head therapist. We will cover holistic methodology and evaluate the case studies of five children with different conditions.

Questions are encouraged, and parents and therapists alike are all welcome. We hope to see you there!

Tuesday 28th August,
6PM-7:30PM,
490 Brighton Road,
Brighton.

Free sausage sizzle provided.
Please RSVP for catering purposes.

Parking available at rear of clinic.

Children most welcome
